FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
Sept. 22, 2012

Tecumseh FFA, agricultural education program welcome student teacher

TECUMSEH, Okla. – The Tecumseh FFA chapter and agricultural education program recently welcomed student teacher Bryce Bethel, an agricultural education senior from Oklahoma State University.

The student teaching program will allow Bethel to bridge the gap between teaching theory and practice. During his 12-week student teaching experience, Bethel will teach classes, be involved with FFA activities, and assist with supervised agricultural education experiences under the guidance of cooperating teachers Jeremy Frye, Kendall Whittington and Kenny Ledford. Bethel said he is looking forward to the experience.

“I’ve always admired the Tecumseh FFA chapter,” Everett said. “I’ve had a positive perception of the program since I participated in my local chapter in Claremore.”

When Bethel was in high school, he was active in his FFA chapter, showing swine and beef cattle and participating in farm business management career development events and prepared public speaking contests.

“I look forward to meeting and getting to know the students and the people within the community,” Bethel said. “It’s going to be a great learning experience.

- MORE -
Upon completion of the student teaching experience, Bethel will return to Oklahoma State University in Stillwater where he will earn a Bachelor of Science Degree in Agriculture with a major in agricultural education.

“I look forward to meeting and getting to know students and people within the community,” Bryce said. “It’s going to be a great learning experience.”

###