Sequoyah FFA, agricultural education program welcome student teacher

SEQUOYAH, Okla. – The Sequoyah FFA chapter and agricultural education program recently welcomed student teacher Magan Osborne, an agricultural education senior from Oklahoma State University.

The student teaching program will allow Osborne to bridge the gap between teaching theory and practice. During her 12-week student teaching experience, Osborne will teach classes, be involved with FFA activities, and assist with supervised agricultural education experiences under the guidance of cooperating teachers Rodney Arthur and Keena Young. Osborne said she is looking forward to the experience.

“I’ve admired the Sequoyah FFA chapter for several years and am impressed by the quality of activities and students in the program,” Osborne said. “I’m excited about the opportunity to student teach at a premier program in Oklahoma.”

When Osborne was in high school at Moore, Okla., she was active in his FFA Chapter, showing swine, and competing in career development event quiz bowls and serving as a chapter officer. At OSU and Connors State College, she has been active in Collegiate FFA and Agricultural Ambassadors.

“I look forward to meeting and getting to know the students and the people within the community,” Osborne said. “It’s going to be a great learning experience.
Upon completion of the student teaching experience, Osborne will return to Oklahoma State University in Stillwater where she will earn a Bachelor of Science Degree in Agriculture with a major in agricultural education.
